THE NATIONAL MINIATURE GALLERY.

NO. 247 BROADWAY, CORNER OF MURRAY ST., over Ball, Tompkins & Black’s. The attention of the public is requested to this establishment, for the production of Photographs on SILVER, IVORY, GLASS and PAPER; and as proof of their superiority, the Proprietor would state that he has received the first premiums of the American Institute, State Agricultural Society, and other Associations for the encouragements of the Arts, etc.

The facilities to make pictures are of the most superior kind, and each picture is done under the immediate supervision of the Proprietor, and the utmost pains taken to make it a gem of art.

The Gallery is the most extensive in the world, and contains the Portraits of nearly all the most eminent men of the age, of which there are nearly ten to one of any other establishment in New-York. Among the collection will be found the following,

EDITOR'S NOTES:

The "National Miniature Gallery" was the earlier endeavor of Edward Anthony in company with Jonas M. Edwards, James Robert Chilton, or James [or Isaiah] R. Clark. For a description of their work, see "By the Southern Mail," New York Herald 11:73 (15 March 1845): n.p. (fourth page of issue).¹ Another reviewer provides the following:

One of the sights of the city, and by no means the least attractive one, is the National Miniature Gallery, at the corner of Broadway and Murray-street. What an array is there of heads!—poets, painters, statesmen and heroes; the evidence of truth stamped on each likeness. MESSRS. ANTHONY, CLARK AND COMPANY have recently made some very important alterations in their modus operandi, which are deserving of especial notice, as they supply all that daguerreotypes have hitherto lacked—an artistic arrangement of light and shade. The 'National Miniature Gallery' is one of the metropolitan 'lions,' and will as well repay a visit as any museum in town.²

The gallery was sold to David E. Gavit in 1850.

A few months after the appearance of this advertisement, a fire would originate in the mercury room of the gallery, and destruction resulted on the evening of Saturday, 13 February 1852. The gallery, uninsured, was a total loss amounting to $3,000.00.³
